I lead Robi's direct channel in Chandpur, and I build the data tools my field team runs on. Years of sales, distribution and field operations taught me which numbers actually move a business. Now I'm turning that into a career in business analytics: clean data, honest KPIs and reports people open every morning.

FEATURED WORK: THE RSSP BUSINESS TRACKER

A daily performance website my team of 100+ checks every morning, built and run by me.

The problem

Every morning I downloaded a raw activation export of tens of thousands of rows, rebuilt my Excel dashboard by hand and pasted screenshots into WhatsApp. Supervisors saw yesterday's numbers late, field staff never saw their own, and nobody could check stock or bike activity in one place.

What I built

- A website that turns the raw Activation, SIM stock, bike distance, staff and attendance exports into live KPIs, with every file read on the phone and only summaries stored.
- Leaderboards, RSSP detail pages, supervisor scorecards, stock cover and FIFO lists, a bike compliance tracker and a DCM KPI scorecard.
- A Morning Brief with an action list, stars of the week and a weekly digest that goes out on WhatsApp in one tap.
- Bangla and English, a team PIN with a short preview for visitors, and private admin views for targets and sensitive data.

What changed

- One morning upload replaces hours of manual reporting.
- Business rules that were in my head are now written into the data: what counts as GA, which material codes are excluded, what a productive bike day is.
- Supervisors and RFOs see their own numbers and their gaps the same morning.

Which customers leave a telecom and how early you can tell, answered in SQL. One in five customers, found with five simple rules, holds half of all churn. Ends with what I would change in the field as a channel manager.

RedCube Super QR, user acceptance testing

Robi's retailer app, 500,000+ users

Tested special access for RSSP Agents and the Super QR flow, where a customer scans a shop's QR and the retailer approves a recharge in seconds. Then ran a one-week beta with five RSSP Agents before the national launch.

Looking for someone who knows both the field and the data? I'm open to business analyst and analytics roles where operations experience counts. The quickest way to reach me is LinkedIn or WhatsApp.
